9:45 am	10:30 am	Keynote address – Associate Professor David Loader (Principal Fellow, Education Faculty University of Melbourne) – The old school paradigms no longer serve us well. So what is the new paradigm? <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Paradigms: Begin with a look at two views of schooling, old and new 2. The future: We are preparing our students for a future that will undoubtedly be different from today. Specifically I would like to consider 4 revolutions that are impacting on the present and determining to some degree the future. These revolutions are: Economic, Social, Knowledge and Education. 'The reality is that we define our future every day by what we do or don't do.' 3. Current pedagogical issues: I would like to address these in the context of preparing for the future. I will be discussing topics including the focus of learning, timing of learning, pacing of learning, settings for learning, styles of learning, support for learning, aims of learning and of course the technology for learning. 4. Of ongoing importance: a good school culture of high expectations that encourages student participation, recognises achievement, cares for and respects its members and reaches out to families and the community and the importance of a good teacher-student relationships

Parents have a particular important part to play in the educating community, since it is to them that primary and natural responsibility for their children's education belongs. Unfortunately in our day there is widespread tendency to delegate this unique role. Therefore it is necessary to foster initiatives which encourage commitment, but which provide at the same time the right sort of concrete support which the family needs and which involve it in the Catholic school's educational project. The constant aim of the school therefore should be contact and dialogue with the pupils' families, which should also be encouraged through the promotion of parents' associations, in order to clarify with their indispensable collaboration that personalized approach which is needed for an educational project to be efficacious.
